THE MARK OF A NEW ERA

As early as the Case Brothers began making knives in upstate New York during the late 19th century, they were also methodically scrawling symbolic stamp designs into their blades. Many other American knife manufacturers also adopted similar practices.

We've since come to realize the critical value of these unique and historic marks. Collectively, they document a timeline that spans more than 130 years of knives that bear the Case name.

Many of the early Case tang stamps were used over time periods that varied widely from era to era. But that changed in 1970, when the company began stamping blades with a "dot dating" tang design that would span a decade of manufacturing. The annual removal of one of ten dots from the blade presses signaled the start of a new production year that collectors could recognize as new knives were released to dealer displays. Thus, it became possible to know the exact year in which each Case® knife was manufactured.

The year 2020 signals the beginning of another decade of Case knives, and with it comes a brand new tang stamp design - one that recalls the early use of the "ten-dot" dating system - and the 'CASE XX' marking that's become one of Case's most treasured hallmarks.

Join us in celebrating the mark of a new era for Case knives, and a look ahead to our future!
